But little clse is heard here, but this affair, and the office of the local paper was besieged on Friday morning with persons eager to secure a copy of that morning's issue, in which appeared the card of Treasurer J. L. Powell, giving his explanation of the affair.

In closing his card, Mr. Powell says:
"My friends know, as I believe, that I am always ready and anxious to correct any errors or mistakes, which any end all persons are liable to make. And if there is anything wrong in my accounts as treasurer, or I have done any wrong, I do not know it, and anything which I can be shown to owe the county I am ready and willing to pay at once, and if I have done any individual any wrong, I am ready and willing to reimburse him for it."

Ilsh the will of the late Mrs. Ann Savage, The evidence showed that Mrs. Savage died about twenty years since, leaving a will and bequeathing her property to her grandchildren. After her death the will was not offered for probate, and the son and only heir sold the property to Mr. Bowen, for which he paid the cash. The son (Mr. Savage) died a few years since, and a year or two ago the will was produced and probated, the heirs under the will calming the property. Counsel for the purchasers took the ground that the will was not signed legally, from the fact that the two subscribing witnesses did not sign at the same time and in the presence of each other, and also in the presence of the testativa. The jury sustained this view and brought in a verdict accordingly. Able counsel represented both sides, and the case was contested from start to finish. Six lawyers were engaged in the case.
